DATA PROCESSING AGREEMENT WITH 3rd PARTIES

Drafting Note

These notes in red should be deleted from the finished processing notice and are only for your information to aid completing and amending the agreement ready for your organisation's use.

Background

Under the current data protection laws in force, any person who has suffered damage as a result of an infringement of the data protection laws is only entitled to receive compensation from the data controller. Under the new regime, in order to ensure effective compensation for data subjects, controllers and processors that are involved in the same processing and are responsible for any damage caused, shall be held liable for the entire damage, meaning compensation can be sought from both the data controller and the data processor (although a processor or controller that is held liable to pay compensation on this basis is entitled to recover from the other party, that part of the compensation corresponding to their part of the responsibility for the damage.)

In light of this change in the law, it is now very important that data controllers and their processors put in place data processing agreements specifying the scope of the processor's responsibilities and any mechanisms for resolving disputes regarding respective liabilities.

Providing the agreement

This data processing agreement has been designed to be provided, where commercially feasible to do so, to any third party data processors that process personal data on your organisation's behalf. The agreement has been prepared to either replace the data protection provisions in any existing services agreement you have with the data processor or alternatively to supplement and add to its terms. The agreement should therefore be amended where indicated as appropriate.

A data controller is defined as 'a natural or legal person, public authority, agency or other body, which, alone or jointly with others, determines the purposes and means of the processing of personal data' whereas a data processor is defined as 'a natural or legal person, public authority, agency or other body which processes personal data on behalf of the data controller'.

A data processor is therefore a person who processes personal data in accordance with the instructions of the data controller. Many of your suppliers for example may be data processors, but not all suppliers are data processors. For example, an outsourced payroll provider will be a data processor, as they will process the payroll information they are provided by you about your staff strictly in accordance with your instructions. An external examiner who has been instructed by a club to assess a participant's performance on a training course, again strictly in accordance with your instructions will also be a data processor. An email marketing specialist will be a data processor for a club/organisation where it has been instructed to process certain personal information (e.g. names and contact details of its members) for the purposes of sending out invites to an event that is being hosted by the club/organisation. However, a health insurance provider providing health insurance to your employees would be a data controller because, although they are supplying a product to your employees, they will decide how they use and process the personal data they are provided with in order to provide the insurance product.

Although the GDPR sets out the provisions that need to be contained, as a minimum, in a contract between a data controller and a data processor, it does not stipulate the exact terms. Therefore this agreement has been prepared to be fairly biased towards the NGB/Regional Body/Club as the data controller and it is possible that a data processor may reject certain provisions or ask for the agreement to be amended. Where you wish to avoid significant amendments to the processor agreement or it would make more commercial sense to provide a third party processor with a more mutually biased agreement, please use the 'Standard External Data Processing Agreement – Middle Ground Approach'.
